

International Criminal Searches

Most countries provide for three tiers within the justice system. These tiers are usually comprised of a local (city) or district level, provincial level and federal level. When available, the local or district level usually yields the most significant data.

Court files are typically stored and archived manually with very little automation. Some jurisdictions allow access to police records that are maintained by local law enforcement agencies and / or Central Criminal Justice Agencies as it conforms to local data privacy regulations and legal provisions.

Some of these agencies may require a request directly from the applicant. *Signed agreements are required.
